1. Anything in the shape of a _____ will be sure to express feelings of love. Be sure to include all the arteries and veins to let them know it's real. As an added bonus, use the gift to study for your upcoming anatomy and physiology test.

3. You've always been told you have a way with _____—now's your chance to shine. Write a heartfelt poem and read it out in the courtyard in hopes that your lover will notice you. And if they fail to do so, ask your English teacher if they will give you extra credit for your A+ poetry.

4. Perhaps you have the feeling that your significant other hasn't been entirely honest with you. In this case, a surprise _____ detector test is the perfect gift. Maybe you'll finally find out why they're constantly checking their phone—or maybe you'll just find out that they're actually watching sports highlights.

5. How about we skip Valentine's Day entirely? Get out those leprechaun hats and paint the town green for _____!

7. The gift of an experience is all the rage—perhaps you could get Cupid himself to give you and your special friend a lesson in _____—who doesn't want to learn how to send arrows flying into people's backsides? Maybe with enough target practice, you could be with someone you actually like.

8. If your best friend doesn't have someone to spend Valentine's Day with, it's time to play matchmaker. Head straight to the pet store after school and buy them a _____. With just one smooch, they'll turn into a prince...hopefully.

11. When it comes to giving, your dog probably knows what's best. After all, as a man's best friend, they know all the answers to life's pressing questions. We at Cheeky are sure they'll dig up the perfect _____ they buried in the midst of the snowstorm, and you can gift it last minute. Perhaps one day, they could be the best dog at your wedding.

2. The fact that you're alone on Valentine's Day can be changed with a simple recipe for a _____ potion: blood of your worst enemy, a heart shaped donut and snow from the tops of the Appalachian Mountains to tie it all together.

6. Chocolate-covered _____ are a crowd favorite, but if you really want to stand out at the Valentine's Day party, decorate them like candy corn. If anyone asks, just say you were reading the wrong calendar, and you thought it was Halloween—but in actuality you just wanted people to see that this fruit does not deserve to be associated with a holiday as lame as Valentine's.

9. The standard box of _____ has been the classic Valentine's gift for years. Spice it up by replacing a few of them with little bird eggs. The inside is gooey enough to be delicious truffle filling—but be sure to remind your friend that they aren't vegan.

10. As you snuggle up with your loved one watching movies on Valentine's, you realize there's only one thing missing: your _____. How are you supposed to see without the frames around your face? You've probably chosen a Spiderman movie instead of "The Notebook" and made this evening far more awkward than necessary.

12. This phone will last longer than your relationship. Therefore, it is the only thing that will show them your undying love for them (Hint: if you throw it, it doesn't break).

13. Candle-lit dinners are a thing of the past. Spice things up at the dinner table by turning it into a high-energy _____. Be sure to tell everyone to bring their own glowsticks and practice those dance moves to impress that special someone.

14. Flowers don't live too long. Roses? I give them two weeks max. What you really need is a rare work of art that is sure to last long. Stealing a priceless piece from the art _____ is sure to show your significant other that you love them so much, you would risk a fine or even jailtime just to see them smile.
